Even in poems that do not explicitly take historical events as their subject matter, tragedy's after-image floats beneath the surface of the language. Against Forgetting is organized according to historical tragedy, starting with the Armenian Genocide and proceeding through the twentieth century to the pro-democratic demonstrations in China. Each section is preceded by a short statement that gives historical background for the events in order to place the poems in a proper context.

" Poetry cannot block a bullet or still a sjambok, but it can bear witness to brutality thereby cultivating a flower in a graveyard. Carolyn Forché's Against Forgetting is itself a blow against tyranny, against prejudice, against injustice. It bears witness to the evil we would prefer to forget, but never can and never should." - Nelson Mandela

Against Forgetting: Twentieth-Century Poetry of Witness ...

In her ground-breaking anthology, Against Forgetting: Twentieth-Century Poetry of Witness (1993), Forché described the difficulties of politically-engaged poetry: " We are accustomed to rather easy categories: we distinguish between ' personal ' and ' political ' poems...The distinction...gives the political realm too much and too little scope; at the same time, it renders the personal too important and not important enough. If we give up the dimension of the personal, we risk ...
